AMBIGUITY

Sir:

The Catholic Church contends that the Pope is infallibly right! The bishops in turn receive their authority from the Pope. In a matter of Faith or morals the Church therefore cannot err. The Pastoral letters clearly state that the stand of the church is one of morals, so therefore under penalty of sin or in the case of complete disregard of the bishops decree excommunication.

Who gets the Ax first the three bishops here or Cushing & Spellman in the States? If neither side does, then it must follow that the Roman Catholic Church is neither very Catholic or universal for what is good for a Catholic in Puerto Rico should be just, for one, anywhere in the world.

I dont understand the ambiguity but I think it would be a lot of fun and informative to see the bishops Cushing & Davis on TV debating this question I believe that bishop Davis could give us a pretty good lesson in politics.
